Rapid Entry System (RES)

More Rescues, Less Recoveries.

Submersion accidents can be especially time sensitive. The first officer on scene may be the only person capable of affecting a rescue before drownings take place. The RES allows the first officer on-scene to assess the situation, place the call for dive team back-up, and initiate the location and extraction of the victim(s) while the dive team is en-route, saving valuable time and increasing the chances of the victim's survival.

Highlighted Features

- Mini SCUBA system that can be quickly utilized in 60 seconds or less.
- RES can be stored in areas too small to accommodate a full set of SCUBA gear.
- 13 cubic foot aluminum tank can provide up to 15 minutes of air at the surface.
- The air cell is stowed under a protective cover and can be partially inflated to achieve positive flotation or fully inflated for up to 36 lbs of lift.
- RES includes harness, cummerbelt, egressor system, and padded carry case.
